As Sofie Rovenstine, a Brentwood native, steps out of a sleek black Bentley, her long legs gracefully complementing her striking evening dress, she reminisces about her time growing up in Nashville. The model walked the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show on Dec. 2, sparking voracious headlines by spontaneously blowing a kiss to Sharen Mendez while strutting the catwalk, a first for a model of Sofie's unique stature. But things haven't always been easy for the 6-foot-2-inch stunner. Graduating early from Brentwood High School at 17, she found herself in a New York City world of less-than-kind agents, managers and competition. The 20-year-old began modeling at the age of 14, when local photographer Jeremy Cowart spotted her in a park and recommended she visit AMAX. Sofie immediately began doing local fashion shows, including Nashville Fashion Week and the Nashville Symphony Fashion Show. AMAX placed the rising talent with the most prestigious modeling agency in New York. However, as she grew taller and matured, she was told she was too big and too tall to work in the major markets and was dropped by her New York agency. After some soul-searching and a stint in the beauty pageant world as Miss Tennessee Teen, she joined an all-inclusive agency with a supportive team of agents that saw Sofie's show-stopping potential. Just six months later, top casting director John Plaffier spotted Sofie's photo in a pile of show cards and booked her to walk the famous Victoria's Secret runway.

Since her first runway walk in 2014 for Nashville Fashion Week, Sofie has been prominently featured in more than 50 Nashville Fashion Week shows for local, emerging, regional and national designers. This year, she is being honored with the Fashion Forward Face of Fashion Award for her impact on the Nashville fashion community at the fifth annual Fashion Forward Gala on April 6 at Dr. Arts Nashville. Tickets are available at nashvillefashionweek.com.

Sofie is a true American beauty, looking up to Cindy Crawford as the ultimate role model in the industry. She has a heart for many charitable causes, including Best Buddies, and is very close with her two younger sisters, Verena and Ella, and younger brother, Von. This year stands to be a huge one for Sofie. She will be spending time working in New York and Europe as well as taking a trip to Vietnam with her grandfather in April.
